The oil and natural gas industry is hard at work meeting today's energy needs and developing next-generation forms of energy. Between 2000 and 2014, the industry invested $90 billion in new low and zero emissions technologies. This represents 30 percent of the $304

U.S. oil and natural gas companies are pioneers in developing alternatives and expanding America's use of virtually every form of energy – from geothermal to wind, from solar to biofuels, from hydrogen power to the lithium ion battery for next-generation cars.
