LT. GOVERNOR MOLLY GRAY TO VISIT SALVATION FARMS AND PARTNER LOCATIONS TO BUILD SUPPORT FOR AGRICULTURAL SURPLUS MANAGEMENT PROGRAMS

What: Lt. Governor Molly Gray will visit Salvation Farms, and their partner organizations Pete’s Greens and the Vermont Studio Center, to recognize and build support for the critical role agricultural surplus management plays in Vermont’s food system and the state’s response to the COVID-19 pandemic and climate change. Unmitigated climate change will, and the COVID-19 pandemic has increased food insecurity in Vermont. Unmarketable farm surplus exceeds two million pounds annually in Vermont and, at best, only 12% of this resource is currently being captured. Salvation Farms is working to create a statewide blanket of gleaning initiatives, to increase Vermont’s capacity to capture greater volumes of farm fresh surplus by supporting organizations as they develop and manage effective gleaning programs that serve some of our most vulnerable neighbors. Strong support for agricultural surplus management programs, alongside federal USDA and state programs, will help ensure Vermont is enhancing local food systems while increasing waste prevention and serving our neighbors in need.

Lt. Governor Gray will be joined by Salvation Farms Executive Director Theresa Snow and in addition to Salvation Farms, will visit Pete’s Greens for surplus produce sorting and the Vermont Studio Center for surplus crop processing.
