Legal Aid Faces Proposed Cut of $100,000

The Administration is proposing to reduce its Agency of Human Services (AHS) Central Office funding of Vermont Legal Aid (VLA) by $47,000 in General Fund dollars. If, as expected, these General Fund dollars are matched on a 50/50 basis with the loss of federal funds, the total reduction will be almost $100,000. This will result in AHS general funding for Legal Aid returning to the level it was in 2008. Rather than reducing Legal Aid back to 2008 funding levels, the state should be providing a modest increase of $75,000 to allow VLA funding to keep pace with inflation.

Legal Aid has received funding from the Central Office (Secretary's Office) of AHS for more than 30 years. It supports two major areas of legal services, at approximately the same levels:

Right to Counsel cases in which the state is required, by statute, to provide lawyers in certain kinds of cases—primarily mental health commitment and medication cases, as well as certain state guardianship and other proceedings for disabled clients; and,

General Civil Legal Services to the Poor cases where Legal Aid helps low-income clients solve a range of critical civil legal problems.

Work on the first group of cases has increased significantly since the abandonment of the State Hospital after Irene, as the patients are now located in many places across the state. It was much more efficient for both the Mental Health Law Project (MHLP) and the state's doctors and lawyers to handle most of these cases when everybody participating was in Waterbury. For example, travel and medical records copying charges have more than doubled. In addition, the number of commitment-related cases has increased by over 15% in the past three years and the disability-related guardianship caseload has increased by 36%.

At the same time, requests for help with general civil legal problems have also increased. Over the past seven years, the number of low-income Vermonters calling Legal Aid for help has gone from less than 11,000 in 2008 to over 13,000 last year, a 20% increase.

Vermont Legal Aid is facing two compounding challenges. It must surmount the difficulties and inefficiencies caused by the closing of the State Hospital, while at the same time handling a significantly increased demand for services from low-income Vermonters. Because Legal Aid is required to accept the cases that are assigned by the court, any decrease in overall funding will result in our turning away an ever-larger number of low-income clients with critical legal needs.

As the Legislature considers the SFY 2016 budget, it is important to remember intervention by VLA often results in saving state dollars in both the short and long-term, and supports key Agency goals. In the vast majority of cases, our clients are in a better social and financial condition at the end of the case than when they first sought help.

- ✓ These clients, who are all receiving, or are eligible for, AHS services will generally need fewer AHS services and less financial support than they would have if they had not received help from VLA.
- ✓ Legal Aid helps domestic violence victims protect themselves and their children, maintain their housing, and receive adequate child support.
- ✓ Legal Aid helps disabled Vermonters get federal disability benefits that will help insure they will not need to rely on state benefit programs for years into the future.
- ✓ Legal Aid helps Vermonters keep their homes in the face of unlawful or unauthorized mortgage foreclosures brought by out-of-state banks and loan servicers.

Most Vermonters only come to VLA when they face a crisis—losing their only income, losing their home, afraid for their children’s safety, facing a desperate health care choice, or losing their individual liberty. We are there at the end of the line, often after all the other agencies and organizations have tried to help. Legal Aid often makes the difference between hope and despair in the lives of everyday Vermonters.

Rather than cutting Legal Aid back to 2008 funding levels, AHS should provide at least a cost of living increase so that we can maintain critical legal services to Vermonters in need. While the legislature is facing extraordinary financial challenges this year, investment in Legal Aid funding not only leads to an improvement in the lives of hundreds of low-income Vermonters, but also saves scarce state resources.
